

WHITE ELEPHANTS SCARCE IN SIAM.

Only Four of the Beasts to Be Found in the Royal Stables.

ARE KEPT IN GREAT HALLS.

Once Each Year They Take Part in State Processions, Arranged in Gorgeous Trappings.

Chicago, April 16.—From Bangkok, Siam, Eliza R. Seldome writes to Chicago paper that there is no guide book to Bangkok, no map or plan of the city to be bought, and no regular book store to buy one in.

If one wants a guide the hotel people think a minute, and then agree to find some one who knows the way around; of one goes to the Consul, who can always send for a Chinese or Siamese who has shown strangers the city's lions after a fashion.

Through the consulate one gets permission to see the great temple within the palace grounds, the Wat Phra Kaew, where the famous emerald Buddha is enshrined, and at the same time one sees the four white elephants now in the King's stable—probably the last of their line.

After the dust and noise, and untidy houses, and general offensiveness of the Chinese quarter, the city of the King, with broad streets and spacious gardens of shrubbery and whitewashed walls, comes to one as a glimpse of paradise. One dismounts at a fantastic, gilded gateway in the immediate white wall of the palace and passes into the great outer court.

Lawn on one side, the buildings of the Young Men's Association, and on the other the stables of the royal elephants, and the storied umbrellas of priests and royalty, stand along the wayside, and on the sides of the stone balustrade, under the shade of the stables of the sacred animals, who have given name and color to arms, symbols and standards to Siam.

"WHITE" ELEPHANTS—MOUSE COLOR. We all know now that one shall not find the "white" elephant really white—as white as a white rat, or a white fox, or a white polar bear. The four "white" elephants now in attendance at the palace are a good mouse color—as gray as a Maltese cat, perhaps, shading to pinkish flesh color at the ends of the ears, where they are speckled and freckled as if with some skin disorder.

Each beast occupies a great, roomy, vaulted stall to itself, each one stands on a square pedestal or platform, and each one that I saw was tethered by one, two or three leashes, according to his disposition.

To as many stall tests were in the floor. The first elephant we came to was tied fast by three feet. He swung his trunk and rested from one foot to the other in an unpleasant way.

The keeper crawled out of his sleepy corner and gave a bunch of green fodder to the elephant, and the animal turned its small, yellow, wall eye more amiably to the light.

The next elephant was the same spotty, leopards looking creature, but more powerful in disposition and the third one was best looking of all. This pretty Maltese gray beast tossed his trunk in salute and turned his forehead lazily, and several bunches of greens went to it in reward.

None of the elephants of state, the best, best looking, or richest was visible in the great hall, where the beasts kept stall.

The fourth and last elephant in line was warranted most savage and vicious of all, and a long distance back from the other way was enough for the elephant was swinging his trunk and blustering from one stall to another and bellowing and a wild eye and the look of one dragged to a dangerous point.

CAREFULLY TENDED. The stables are clean and well kept, spacious and airy, and the animals are carefully tended and fed, exercised within the palace grounds, and rarely, rarely, rarely each year, given part in state processions.

The elephant, and especially the white elephant, being sacred to Buddha, was held in the greatest reverence in all these Buddhist provinces and petty kingdoms of further India, and its possession was a matter of great pride and rivalry.

That the other kingdoms have fallen and are now one of the Siamese provinces, and that the white elephant makes his last stand here.

The last addition to the royal stables was made five years ago, when a faded and speckled elephant, the last of the line, was brought from the court of the King of Laos country, in the north, and brought down to Bangkok, in great state and received with all the pomp and circumstance of the King, clergy and all the court following.

SECRET OF DEATH VALLEY. Dam and Wall Tell of Race That Occupied Desolate Place.

REPUBLICAN SPECIAL. Los Angeles, April 16.—Death Valley, which has so thwarted man in his attempts to obtain a foothold within its confines, was once the home of man and boasted some degree of civilization. This is made apparent by the discoveries of prospectors, who recently penetrated an unexplored portion of the valley.

In attempting to enter a small canyon at the northeastern extremity of the valley, they found their way blocked by a wall of masonry which extended entirely across the canyon, at a height of about ninety feet. The wall had crumbled in places and showed signs of centuries of wear, but in the main it was a solid wall.

The men clambered up the sides of the canyon till they reached the top of the massive wall, which they had a thickness of thirty feet. It is about three times as thick at the base. It was evidently built on a dam or a wall of masonry, and descended from the mountains during the rainy season. For investigation disclosed an ancient canal leading out of the valley to the plain.

Along the side of the canyon above the level of the masonry were shallow caves, evidently hollowed out by the hand of man. Across the face of each of these were walls of adobe brick of rude workmanship, indicating that the dam was also a wall of defense, or at least a scale of masonry in the face of even weak opposition.

In some of the cave homes were found broken pottery and rude implements hammered out of copper, a box of watch the prospectors found at the head of the canyon, with ancient weapons, showing where the natives got their supply.

DIED FROM SKIPPING ROPE. Girl Champion's Heart Could Not Stand the Strain.

REPUBLICAN SPECIAL. New York, April 16.—Pretty and vivacious Mary Cuff, the seven-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Michael Cuff, of No. 24 Avenue D, Bayonne, N. J., died of a weakened heart caused by her excessive indulgence in skipping rope.

Mary was passionately fond of rope skipping. She would skip to school and home again, and during the recess she would take her rope to the courtyard and jump until the bell rang summoning the pupils back again. She was one of the brightest children in St. Mary's parochial school, and she often declared that Mary could skip the rope hundreds of times and outdo any of her companions.

In the afternoon Mary indulged in her favorite amusement with unusual spirit and kept it up until she was faint. She went home and told her mother that she felt a pain about her heart. Mrs. Cuff sent for Doctor J. P. Kane, who found that the child had weakened her heart by jumping.

The child's condition rapidly became worse. She became delirious, and, imagining she was again skipping the rope, kept calling off the number of turns. When it was realized that there was no hope for the girl, a priest was summoned and anointed her. She kept calling off the number of turns until she was performed.
